

Debut Contemporary

Last month saw the opening of Ella Prakash's solo exhibition at Debut Contemporary. The Bahrain-based Indian artist attracted some of the most powerful and influential people from the Indian art and business world of London.

Cocktails were flying, and artwork was breath-taking. Ella's theme on women empowerment took onlookers by surprise in an explosion of colour. So much so that her exhibition made headlines in Bahrain despite it being Formula 1 week. Keep your eyes peeled for part two during India Art week in June.

Q&A

with local Mark Hill, founder of Green Box Drinks

Q: What inspired you to start Green Box Drinks in 2012?

A: I had found a way to sell premium quality alcoholic spirits in an environmentally friendly way. We produce Boxer Gin, Element29 British Wheat Vodka, Bloodshot Spiced and Little Devil Bloody Mary Mix.

Q: Do you have any celebrity followers?

A: A few. We have spotted Kate Hudson and Matt Bellamy enjoying a Little Devil Bloody Mary, and Hugh Bonneville, aka Lord Grantham, sipping a Boxer Gin and tonic.

Q: What do you like about being based in Notting Hill?

A: Walking to work and the variety of people on the streets.

Q: What gets you through a day at work?

A: Multicultural lunch options on Golborne Road; you can choose from Italy, Morocco, Spain, Lebanon, Austria, Palestine, India, Denmark and England.

Q: What was your first ever business idea?

A: Hangover-free beer. I'm still working on the recipe!

Q: What can we expect from GBD this year?

A: Boxer Summer Punch coming to a pub near you...
